VALUABLE

Timber Lands

And Mill Property

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber, desirous of disposing of all the interest in Timber Lands and mills, will sell on favorable terms the following:

One-Half Township No. 5, Range 4, Oxford County.

The whole township contains twenty-six thousand (26,000) acres; is heavily timbered with spruce; estimated at sixty to eighty millions of which stands within a mile and one hundred distance of the Magalloway river or its branches, which runs through the town, or Parmachenna Lake, which is embraced within its limits.

Also 10,000 Acres of Land in the Town of Byron, Oxford Co., well covered with large Spruce timber. Swift river and its branches run through these lands and empty into the Androscoggin below Rumford Falls.

Also 1200 Acres Timber and Wood Land in Town of Gorham, N. H.

two miles above the Alpine House, on the line of the Grand Trunk Railroad, and the banks of the Androscoggin river. There is a fine mill privilege offered on these lots which, from its proximity to the Railroad, is steadily increasing in value.

Also 2500 Acres Lands in the Towns of Albany and Stoneham, near the village of North Waterford, Oxford County. This land is covered with thrifty sapling Pine timber, standing near Crooked river, which runs through the tract. Logs put into Crooked river, can be run to Sebago, or by hauling four to five miles they can be put into the Saco. There is a good mill privilege, with a single saw mill on the tract. Distance to the canal at Harrison ten miles; to the Railroad at Sonth Paris twelve miles. The land is valuable for settling purposes, after being cleared of timber.

Also 435 Shares of Stock in the Lewiston Steam Mill Company, the whole capital stock being represented by 500 shares. The property of the company consists of a steam Saw Mill, capable of manufacturing five million feet of long lumber, with a proportionate amount of clapboards, shingles and laths. About fifteen acres land in the city of Lewiston well located for building purposes, and thirty thousand acres of timber land, well located on the Androscoggin river and its branches, from which but a small quantity of the timber has been cut.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ROBLIN GREATHOUSE, by John Franklin Swift, is a tolerably well written story of life in Washoe, with curious and in many cases interesting descriptions of mining. Judge, among the knowing ones, of that region, rather disgusted by glimpses of political life that make a somewhat wearisome break now and then in the story which is, in itself, of sufficient interest to hold the reader's attention to the end. Published by Carlton, New York. For sale by Charles Hight.

HONOR BRIGHT is a fascinating and not at all improbable story of the Bohemian type, where in the heroine, a young girl, who had been educated in an infidel institution is brought by a long and weary course of reasoning and experience to believe in and trust the only true God. The characters are natural, especially Mark Mallory and his gifted but ever-prided brother who are carefully and vividly drawn, while that natural impossibility the "perfect man," is happily omitted from the story. Published by Carlton, New York. For sale by Hight.

NEW MAGAZINES

Whitney's Musical Guest for June contains a comic song entitled "So Near Sighted," a song and chorus by Shattuck and a serenade by Frank Howard. "Are you coming Love Tonight?" which last will be good particularly in front. Published by W. W. Whitney, Toledo, Ohio.

Fred Little's Corsair for June has a fine collection of poems and poetry for the young folks, among which is the conclusion of Mrs. Miller's historical serial "Wolfstone and Whaling," a story that all will be sorry to see the end of. The picture stories are excellent. The best feature of this Magazine is that it may be made very amusing by the exercise of a little ingenuity. Published by Sewell & Miller, Chicago.

A young man, not a thousand miles from Bloomington, was greatly puzzled with his landlady's daughter, and wished her for his wife. In order to win her unsophisticated heart, he invited her to go with him to the circus. She accepted the invitation, and as they neared the ticket-wagon the young man asked upon his side by asking her undecidedly if she would marry him. "No, thank you," she replied. "You weren't on it" exclaimed the ardent youth; "then buy your own ticket." She took his advice and enjoyed the show greatly, but he didn't.

Biddeford is still on the wing. The next move would have a smack of cherry about it were it on the wing.

An Irishwoman who had married a Chinaman, and became a St. Louis court recently for protection from her matrimonial spouse.

Two rascals representing themselves as revenue officials, obtained candy from a farmer in Wisconsin under false pretenses. Having filled up a hand, mortgage and bolted him to with the candy pursued "FLORENCE," their horses smoking.

Canada has had its first case of penal slavery, a man having been sentenced to be executed under the new law. The executioner declined.

The death of a Sacramento policeman, who was killed while on duty, is followed by the suicide of the other policeman who was left in charge of the body, by putting a pistol to his head.

A Western paper announces that a young woman lately was almost murdered by her husband. He so far succeeded in the attempt that she can walk to the jail every day to call on him, and stop to give him grub.

A Washington belle says: "The washing question when the young man who don't do it for himself comes to be settled, there is a more decided support conveyed by a Paris dress not to be derived from the firmest religious principles."

Cincinnati journals announce a brilliant opening of the drowning seasons. One person per diem is a fair average.

It is estimated that there are five hundred millions of dollars deposited in the savings banks of this country.

The meaning of the letters U. R. A., adopted as the motto of the Fenian invaders, and the interpretation of which has puzzled a great many, is "Tean it away."

The Matrimonial News is the name of a four-column weekly just started in London, which is said to contain more than two hundred announcements from candidates for marriage.

THE VOTE TO-DAY.

The question upon which our citizens are called to vote to-day, has been thoroughly discussed at public meetings and in our columns; and divested of all irrelevant matter is simply a question whether our people, who are the parties most largely interested in the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad, shall furnish the further aid actually necessary for putting it in a condition for either profitable use, or for any disposition of its property and franchises which would not be a sacrifice,—or permit the road to fall into decay, or become a profitable acquisition to individuals who stand ready to drive such a one-sided bargain as the unfinished state of the enterprise renders inevitable.

The investment of the city funds has already been made, and there is no benefit to be derived from discussing its original propriety; but recognizing the fact that we have a large interest at stake in this road, we must take such steps as are shown to be necessary for its protection.

It is plain to every one that in its present imperfect condition the road is unable to perform the work for which it was intended, and the propositions recently published, show exactly the style of trade to which we shall be obliged to submit, if the road is to be thrown into private hands upon the terms which can be dictated to a helpless corporation.

We are confident that our people will not make this sacrifice. The loan required is a small sum compared with the interest already involved, and we have the best assurances, that with this aid the road will be put into condition not only to provide for all its indebtedness, but for a profitable business thro' a country which will furnish an immense addition to the freight traffic of Bangor. Whereas upon any terms which can at present be obtained for its lease, there is almost a certainty of the ultimate loss to the city of its entire investment. It seems to us that every principle of sound policy; of justice to those communities who have invested money in this line through faith in our intention to sustain it; of local pride in an enterprise with which our city is identified, and finally every principle of self interest demand that we should furnish the credit of the city for the limited amount which will carry this railroad to successful completion and place it, and our property in it, beyond the danger of ruinous barter. To vote "YES" is plainly to vote for the true interests of the city; to vote "No" is as plainly against them.

M. C. R. R. At the evening session of the Stockholders of the Maine Central Railroad Company, in Waterville on Tuesday, Richard D. Rice, John B. Brown, Amos D. Lockwood, Reuben G. Dunn, Geo. M. Patten and Abner Coburn were chosen as Directors, who organized by choosing R. D. Rice as President. J. H. Drummond continues as Clerk. The Directors voted to take immediate steps to extend the road into Portland from Danville. A Lewiston dispatch states that the Directors will meet in that city on Thursday and will proceed to examine the route for the proposed extension of the road from Danville Junction to the Kennebec section.

The New York Standard says the Czar swallows whiskey at the rate of a gallon per day, and the Regent, it is said, takes laudanum. Marshal Prim gambles, and one would think, prescribes. The Czar's condition curiously resembles that of a portion of the Russian peasantry. The Regent's dose would be the best in the world for Spain, if it could only keep that Enfant Terrible quiet, but what drug can minister to a mind diseased? While Marshal Serrano drinks laudanum (can it be so?) Butcher-General De Rodas drinks blood. While Prim gambles, officials must steal. And so poor Spain, amid fever and anarchy, nods to dream of chaos come again, and wakes up to shed blood.

THE FENIANS. Gen. Starr has returned to Buffalo, and states that instead of 1200 men whom he expected to find at the front, there were not more than 200, and that in his engagement, they were opposed by the 60th regiment, some 700 volunteers and artillery, a force too greatly superior for him to resist. He had but one man wounded. Gov. Hoffman of New York, has sent an officer to Malone, to furnish transportation to all strangers in and about that place, and William M. Tweed furnishes money for the expense of bringing back all who belong to New York.—Gen. Donnelly is still under arrest. The teamster Murphy, is still in jail in Canada, but will probably soon be released. The Catholic church and parsonage at Malone, were searched for Fenian arms, by the U. S. civil officers on Monday night, contrary to the wishes of the army officers there, but nothing was found. The Fenian Major Randolph Fitzpatrick of New York, and Col. McNeil, were arrested in Malone, Tuesday night by Marshal Titus, who also arrested several New York newspaper correspondents.

NEW HAMPSHIRE LEGISLATURE. The New Hampshire House of Representatives was sworn yesterday at 11:30 o'clock by Gov. Stearns, attended by the Council. The roll call of the House showed a fuller attendance than usual. Hon. Joseph Wilson of Keene was elected temporary chairman, and on taking his seat, thanked the House for the compliment and remarked that it was forty-one years since he first took his seat in the House. The House then proceeded to a permanent organization by the choice of Hon. S. M. Wheeler of Dover, for Speaker; J. H. Benton, Jr., of Lancaster, Clerk; and S. C. Clark of Guilford, Assistant, Clerk; C. H. Roberts as Sergeant-at-arms. The Senate organized by the choice of Hon. Nathan Gordon of Exeter, for President; John W. Currier of Alton, Clerk; L. S. Morrill of Concord, Assistant Clerk, and W. Colby of Hopkinton, Doorkeeper.

A bill was introduced in the Tennessee Senate on Wednesday declaring null and void one hundred bonds of $1000 each, issued to the Mineral Home Railroad in October, 1860. DEBORAH BECKETT'S WHITE CHICKEN.

BY MRS. H. G. HOVE.

"You can't go ter meetin' to-night," was Mrs. Beckett's salutation to "Lisabeth as the two girls came down stairs shawled and hooded ready for their walk to the usual Wednesday evening prayer meeting.—"Ellsabeth looked up in astonishment.

"Why not?" she asked. "The work is all done up, and there's nothing more for me to do."

Mrs. Beckett drew a step nearer as she said in a severe undertone:

"I shan't trust a girl out eyes'nin' that don't think no more of herself than ter let that miserable Nick Piper go home with her."

"Lisabeth colored hugely But she only answered quietly:

"He has walked home with Henny and I from the evening meetings twice, but it was no fault of mine, and he has never offered his company when I was alone."

Mrs. Beckett evidently suspected some situation against her idol, for he said angrily:

"You needn't make any more talk about it. You just go up stairs an' put yer things away, an' then if you've got any more reasons an' excuses ter make against yer sister you can make 'em."

As Elisabeth obeyed, her heart swelling with indignation and outraged feeling, she caught sight as she passed through the entry of her sister's form on the dark road and she paused to ask in some astonishment:

"Are you going along, Henny?"

"Oh, yes," was the cool rejoinder and she added after a moment's pause, with something that sounded like a smothered sob in her throat:

"Mother can trust me, you know."

But as she turned her face to an instant the moonlight fell full upon it, making it not proudly complacent as her words would have led one to expect, but—oh it and true—enced that Elisabeth caught her breath with sudden undefined terror that pressed in expression in words, and in a moment more the doorway was empty, and the moonbeams lay in shadowless beauty upon the entry floor.

"Seems ter me wife, 'tentures the deacon timidly "you're rather hard on Lisabeth keepin her ter home jest on account of that young man's seem' her from meetin' once or twice. You know she never had the least fancy for him, an' besides—"

"I know what I'm about," interrupted his wife curtly, "I'm goin' ter have it understood once for all, that I won't have that impudent Nick Piper hangin' round after our girls; but," and she dropped her voice confidentially, "that wasn't all the reason I had. The fact is, Mr. Bryant came ter see Henny alone a minit, an' he come ter-night, an' says she:

"Mother, I do wish you'd plan somehow for Lisabeth ter stay ter home ter-night, for she always sticks so close ter the minister me that we can't get a word together comin' home, an' as she don't look me about the matter before, I just made that an excuse."

"T'wont hurt her no ter stay at home one evenin'," I guess."

The deacon groaned faintly.

"She's been a good deal interested in religious things lately, an', perhaps she might found peace at this very meet n'."

Mrs. Beckett shook her head heavily.

"She's one of the kind that's best off to home. She's naturally frivolous at vain, an' it's the excitement of a meetin' that attracts her. She's one that's had good pious example from her cradle up an' yet I've heard her talk in a way that fairly made me scringe all over."

The deacon made no reply, for he had not plodded along in the matrimonial yoke with his "offish" mate for some thirty odd years without having learned the truth of the saying:

"Silence is golden."

But when that lady had broken herself into the next neighbors, for an hour's chat lost no time in finding his way up the lighted stairway, and tapping at the door of his daughter's room.

There was no answer, and after waiting a moment he softly lifted the latch and entered.

"Are you here, Lizzie?"

"Yes, father," and rising from her seat by the open window, Elisabeth turned her beautiful face lovingly towards him.

"Come here, father,—there," and she seated him in her vacant seat, and her self on his knee, then, with her tired head resting upon his faithful, loving breast she sobbed piteously:

"Oh, father, father! Tell me what to do."

The deacon's head trembled as he smoothed the waves of soft golden brown hair which his fatherly heart took such an innocent pride, but he forced his voice to a cheerful tone as he said tenderly:

"I know what you mean, dear, but wouldn't mind it if I was you. The minister means well, only she don't quite understand ye, an' she never did. But it'll all come out right at last, if you'll just have the patience ter wait."

"That don't seem to comfort me a bit, father," sighed the girl. "I try and try to be patient and please her, but she always seems to take it for granted that I must be planning something wrong. I'm fairly discouraged, and I don't know, sometimes, and she shuddered, drearily "but she'll drive me to perdition in spite of your prayers."

"Don't, child, don't!" and the father's heart grew faint with fear, but he added reverently:

"Trust your ways unto the Lord, and He shall bring it to pass. Don't forget that, dear, for it's a promise that never fails."

Elisabeth smiled faintly, and her face grew a shade calmer, as she said doubtfully:

"Tell me, father honestly, do you believe that she loves—that she ever loved me?"

"Love, fer?" the deacon spoke almost reproachfully, "

"Of course she loves you. Ain't you her own flesh an' bone? an' didn't she watch over you when ye was a little, weakly child, night an' day, a'most, for years?"

"I can remember just as plain as if it 'twas only yesterday how she took on when we thought you was a dyin,' with scarlet fever, prayin' an', actooly insistin', on't that the Lord should spare you to her." An' she had her prayer answered, for you began to get better right off; but I really think," and he lowered his tone mechanically "that, from that time she stopped takin' comfort in ye, for she kinder felt that she'd showed a rebellious spirit, an' that the Lord would punish her for it through you, somehow. An' I think that's what's ailed her so kind o' mis-

Mother thinks he's all ready for old, himself to 'em—only waitin' for the chance. But seems ter me, Lisa'd a'most so dreadful fierce about it he'd n' tuk the chance 'fore now."

Elisabeth laughed, and her father could not see the rosy flush upon her face as she said, hesitatingly:

"He don't want to marry her, I know; although," she added hastily, as if blaming herself for the admission, "I dont doubt she'd make an excellent wife for him if he could only fancy her?"

"I dunno 'bout that," and the Deacon spoke in a slow, half saddened tone, "I'm dreadful afraid she ain't humble enough for that place The fact is, she's been ter me the white chicken all her life, an' it stands ter reason that she should get a little conceited, ter she do least; an' there's nothin' folks won't forgive in a minister's wife sooner than feelin' herself fur'n her neighbors. But I hear your ma' dun' down stairs, so I guess we'll say good night now, little gal."

And with a warm, fatherly caress, he was about to rise from his chair when, suddenly his daughter's arms were thrown about his neck and hot and warm cheek was pressed to his own while she whispered shyly:

"I thought I wouldn't say anything, my—but I must just tell you, father, dear," she added something was still softer tone that made the Deacon fairly spring to his feet in

"I did so child? Why, I never mistrusted such a thing, an'—"

"You're not sorry, father?" pleaded the clear, girlish voice that instead of answering Deacon burst into a laugh such as he had not indulged in for years.

"If that aint the best joke, now Ian won't yer mother sizzle when she knows of it. Oh, dear, I do added suddenly recollecting himself. I'd ought ter feel solemn over such important news, but somehow or other, I can't no how an' but dickied."

"I do not tell her yet, please," pleaded Elisabeth timidly, and with a terrible foreboding in her heart as she thought of the impending sizzle.

Her father nodded a ready assent

"Time 'nough for trouble her about it jest now" he said more soberly, but as he passed out of the room Elisabeth heard his low laugh as he stairs and wondered in her simple, girlish fashion what her staid father could find so amusing in her recent confidences.

At 9 o'clock Mrs. Beckett went over the house, fastening doors and windows, while in reply to Elisabeth's reminder of her sister's presence she only said indifferently:

"I s'pose she's gone home with Sally Clark or somewhere, I didn't know but she'd stay with her to-night if the meetin' held late."

That was satisfactory, of course, and ere long, all under had folded her wings peacefully over the good Deacon's dwelling, with no sounds or symptoms of coming evil to disturb the peace of its inmates.

The Beckett's were early risers, so early that the Deacon was somewhat surprised as he harnessed his team for the day's work, to see the minister riding up on horseback with a bunch of snowy dog-wood blossoms in his saddle bow that proved the last ridden round by Biddy Mallone's—minus out of this usual way, which must have made his start a remarkably early one.

Elisabeth watched unobserved from the window of her little chamber, the two men as they stood in long and earnest converse at the gate.

"He won't look decent when he asks this over," she thought with a throb of pride at the young man, having alighted from his horse confronted the farmer on his own level; and as her eyes rested upon the erect, manly form, and earnest face of the speaker, she wondered if there were a heart in the world hard enough to refuse to listen to his pleadings, and she fairly trembled with nervous apprehension as her father after taking leave of his visitor, came slowly toward the house, and in a few moments more her mother's loud, irritated tones in the kitchen fell upon her ears, convincing her of what she had before feared, that this unexpected development would not be at all to that lady's taste.

"Lisabeth" she called, peremptorily from the front door, and the trembling girl obeyed, summoning up all her courage as she went, to meet the shock that she knew must come.

"Lisabeth," said Mrs. Beckett sternly, and with the air and tone of a judge, as her daughter entered the room.

"How long has this deceitful business been carried on between you an' the minister?"

The girl dropped her eyes in irritable confusion. "I—I didn't know that he loved me until—"

Mrs. Beckett checked her with a gesture of impatience:

"I don't ask nothin' about his lovin' ye," she interposed scornfully, "I want ter know how long you've been plottin' an' plannin' ter get ahead of yer poor sister, an' deceive your parents? There's no use in denyin' it, for I want ter know."

Elisabeth glanced appealingly to her father, who replied entirely to his wife's question:

"Yer makin' a mountain out of a mole hill, Deborah. If I don't 'sremember you did'nt think 'twas worth while ter tell the old folk for some time after we'd come to a proper understandin' ourselves. We mustn't forget we was young once, an' know how young folk feel about such things."

Mrs. Beckett broke down, sobbing convulsively. "You're ugin me too. What'll poor Henny say, I wonder, when she comes ter hear on't? I believe it'll be the death on 'er, for you know she's set her heart on him,—"

"What yer want?"

The last words were addressed to a neighbor who, having entered unobserved in the confusion, was standing in round-eyed astonishment at the unprecedented spectacle of the Deacon's wife in tears, and who now obeying the chair summons came timidly forward and giving Mrs. Beckett a wide, hastily retreated with the parting information;

"Nick Piper left it at our house last evenin, an' told mother bring it over first thing this mornin'."

Mrs. Beckett read the note which was in Henry's hand writing, from beginning to end, without a change of feature, although a cold, grey shadow crept over her face, and her fingers closed round the paper with a fierce grip, but she did not faint or cry out, she was not one of those who find advent for their feelings in that way; she only did what was still more remarkable in her, handed the note to her husband without a word of comment, nor did a sound escape her lips as he read aloud in a tremulous voice that he vainly tried to render firm and composed the following lines:

"Dear father and mother:

I suppose you will will feel terribly provoked with me when you read this, and know that I am married to Mr. Piper, as I shall be to-night. I know you wouldn't consent, and that is why I agreed to an elopement. I am sorry to make any unpleasantness, but I love him too well to give him up for anybody. I didn't want the min-
